

Lilies

BEAUTIFUL, BUT DEADLY

There are potential dangers lurking in your garden that may harm your cats! Make sure you're in-the-know about toxic lilies before it's too late.

TOXIC LILIES

ASIATIC LILIES

Spot an Asiatic lily by its characteristic leaves that radiate off a central stem. Asiatic lilies often have large, trumpet-shaped blooms in a wide range of colors. All parts of the plant are toxic to cats.

DAYLILIES

Similar looking to Asiatic lilies, the main difference in daylilies is the foliage, which appears almost grassy. All parts of the plant are toxic to cats, so be careful when planting daylilies in your garden.

SYMPTOMS OF LILY POISONING

Vomiting

Lethargy

Diarrhea

Kidney failure

While it only takes a small exposure to potentially cause acute kidney injury, if caught quickly, steps can be taken to ward off life-threatening problems.

The average cost of treating a lily exposure is $1,292, and it increases to $1,622 in multi-cat households.*
